About Rickety Bridge

Cuyla Dudley is a one woman show caring for her heirloom apple orchard and rotating piedmontese cattle on 40 acres of irrigated land all while maintaining a career in healthcare. Cuyla's family have been in Central Oregon since the 1940s she knew she wanted to own her own land some day and graze some cattle. She started with a few head of cattle selling to friends and family here and there. In 2015 she decided to commit to growing her herd and knew she wanted to find a niche market. She landed on a heritage breed of piedmontese cattle which are known to have leaner meat while remaining tender. Purchasing breeding cattle from a local ranch in Culver, Oregon she started growing and transforming her herd. Cuyla takes pride in her animals, providing them the best diet she can by using rotational grazing practices.

"I think happy cows taste better!"

Why Piedmontese?

"They're different and I was looking for a breed with leaner meat. Our beef has fewer calories per ounce than salmon and piedmontese beef contains lower cholesterol than baked chicken!"

Why Ranch?

"It feels good to give back to the community in a different way. I love getting up in the morning, moving irrigation, watching bald eagles. I love being outside."
